Apprehension Rises in Moscow

Foreign Observers Feel Polish Crisis at Worst Stage Yet

By R. W. Apple

New York Three Service MOSCOW — A mood of apprehension about the course of events in Poland, unlike anything seen in the seven mouths since the crisis erupted there, has settled over this capital's foreign community in the last 48 hours.

A number of Western diplo-mats, including several who have in the past accused Washington of scandal-mongering in suggesting that a Soviet invasion of Poland was possible at any moment, said Tuesday night that they felt the situntion had reached a very dangerous stage. Some cautious analysts said that they thought the appointment of Oct. Wojciech Jaruzelski as premier - a move that was almost certainly approved by Moscow in advance represented a last chance for the Warsaw govern-ment to put its affairs in order. None of those who made such ominous comments pretended to have any inside information about Soviet intentions, But many said the pattern of events in Poland, together with the jocreasingly stri-dent comments in the Soviet media, suggested that the Soviet leadership was losing patience with the Poles.

Despite Gen. Jaruzelski's reputation as a moderate who has op-posed the use of force to deal with disturbances in the past, Moscow appears to be looking to him to take n firmer and more consistent approach in dealing with the inde-pendent trade union Solidarity and allied organizations.

One view holds that the Kremlin would like to see evidence of a tougher approach before the be-ginning of the 26th Communist Party Congress opening here on Feb. 23. Gen. Jaruzelski and the Polish party leader, Stanislaw Ka-nia, are expected to attend the congress and meet Soviet officials.

European, American and Third World diplomats continue to be confident that oo invasion will take place before the opening of the party congress, although they believe the Soviet Union would disrupt even that long-planned event if the situation in Poland descended unexpectedly into anar-

Media Drive Against Poland

VIENNA (Reuters) - Soviet bloc news media are running what seems to be a sustained campaign against Poland, portraying the country as a land of chaos open to manipulation by its worst enemies. The campaign, strongest in the Bulgarian, Czechoslovak and East German media, accuses Solidarity of plunging the country into anar-chy and indirectly working with Western powers to overthrow Communist rule.

The Polish leadership has rarely been mentioned in the past two weeks, leading to the conclusion that Poland's allies feel Warsaw is no longer in control.

Western diplomats and Polish sources generally regarded Gen. Jaruzelski's nomination — he is expected to be approved by the parhament Wednesday — as a sign that the party leadership is still on a moderate course.

They also regarded it as an attempt to bolster the beleaguered government with military force by involving the top-ranking officer in a direct role in government. They noted that, as a Soviet-trained officer, Gen. Jaruzelski was eminently eptable to Moscow.

No reason was given for the dis-missal of Mr. Pinkowski, a low-key party stalwart who was appointed by Mr. Gierek at the height of the strikes in August. But as head of the government, he assumed responsibility for implementing party policy and so was held accountable for the economic deterioration and political tension.

As Crises Grow, U.S. Seeks Coherent Foreign Policy

By Bernard Gwertzman. New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - After three weeks in office. the Reagan administration finds itself in a political confrontation with the Soviet Union and troubled by potential crises in Poland and El Salvador even before it has had time to put together n coherent program for dealing with the dozens of other foreign policy problems demanding answers.

What about China and Taiwan? Should Israel and Egypt be pressed to negotiate now? When to resume arms control talks with the Russians? What can be done in Afghanistan? How to deal with Namibia and South Airica? What about Iran, now that the hostages are home? The list goes on and Socretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has tried aggressively to take charge of the foreign poli-cy machinery only to discover how slow-moving the system can be. And there has been little foreign policy comment from the White House, which has been preoccupied with its domestic economie program, President Reagan, in his few remarks on foreign affairs, has demonstrated his lack of expertise.

There has been considerable discussion in diplo-matic circles about a new Cold War, but that seems an exaggeration for the moment. Anatoly F. Doan exaggeration for the moment. Analogy F. De-brynin, the Soviet ambassador, may have been deprived of his parking privileges at the State De-partment, but he was highly visible a week later next to Mr. Haig at a congressional gala. Despite the polemics, highlighted by Mr. Reagan's charge that the Russians reserve the right to "commit any crime" to advance their goals, both sides still seem to want to leave the way open for discussion. For diplomats and journalists looking for priorities and goals, it has been frustrating. Mr. Reagan has so far produced nothing like Jimmy Carter's blueprint of 1977; a Panama Canal treaty, Middle East negotiations, a strategic arms limitation treaty, a Rhodesian settlement, normalization with Cuba,

After listening to Mr. Haig and his top aides, the following cao be said with some authority about the administration:

 It will openly criticize Soviet behavior around the world. It wants to ensure that Moscow understands that it cannot have "business as usual" unless it subscribes to some imaginary international code of conduct.

 It regards human rights as a proper subject for diplomatic discourse, but the emphasis will be on violations committed by terrorists and Washington's adversaries, not by countries friendly to the It will seek to avoid public disputes with allies by consulting on all problems with them and keep-ing disagreements, wherever possible, confided to lomatic channels. It has oo particular fascination for developing countries. Those that cooperate with the United States will be rewarded wherever possible. Soviet "penetration" of the African and Asian continents will not be regarded as inconsequential. So far, despite its acerbic exchanges with the Russians, the Reagan administration has moved cautiously, it deliberately avoided being drawn into the emotional outpouring against Iran after the hostages' return, recognizing that long-term U.S. interests favored keeping the door open.

It said it would not sell any arms to Iran, 2 choice dictated as much by a desire to remain ocutral in the Iran-Iraq war as by the treatment of the hostages. It advised caution in future trade. Mr. Reagan, in his most considered foreign policy remarks, ruled out "revenge."

The administration's main concerns have been the continuing tensions in Poland and El Salvador. Both involve the risk of military involvement. The administration hopes the crises can be avoided, but contingency planning has begun nonetheless. It is known that a Soviet move into Poland would create a massive breakdown in East-West relations; Mr. Haig's first message to Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gronyko repeated the West's warning about intervention in Poland, and Mr. Haig sent copies to all the allies. In El Salvador, the hope is that steppedup U.S. aid will enable the Salvadoran Army to

A major weakness of the Reagan administration in foreign policy seems to be the lack of a senior conceptual thinker. Both Mr. Haig and Richard V. Allen, the White House national security adviser. seems more at home with pragmatic decision-mak-

Nevertheless, they bring to their positions certain ideas, and they have inherited certain realities that inevitably will influence policy. The following are summaries of some basic problems the administration must deal with in three major areas:

SOVIET UNION. The administration basically sees the Soviet Union as dangerous, not to be trust-ed, and antagonistic to Western interests. But there eems to be a recognition that the American public, U.S. strategie interests and allied coocerns compel resumption of arms control aegotiations. Last week, the administration stated officially that it "strongly supported", the decision by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in December, 1979, to deploy 572 new European-based, U.S.built missiles, while pursuing negotiations with the Russians on roducing each side's missiles in Eu-eyes, even though the chances for agreement seem The Reagan administration, despite is opposi-tion to SALT, is committed to resumin; the quest

With the pending strategic arms limitation treaty

Mr. Haig, io his confirmation hearing, called strategic arms limitation was "an urgent and important task" for U.S. diplomacy, But he also said that "we acquire breakthroughs in negotiations with the Soviet Union in arms control only when they perceive that the alternative facing them is a willingness on the part of the United States to match or better what they are willing to deploy." Both he and Mr. Reagan have stressed that there can be oo arms oegotiations without reference to Soviet actions — the so-called "linkage." Thus, if the Polish situation worsens, there is oo chance of any arms negotiations, officials assert. But even if Poland remaios relatively calm, the administration must decide on a timetable for probing Soviet io-

CHINA. Given the administration's antipathy toward the Soviet Union, it would seem logical in expect it to move toward a closer relationship with Peking, Moscow's main adversary, to build on the framework erected by the Carter administration when it normalized relations on Jan. 1, 1979.

But any move toward such a policy by this administration has been hampered by Mr. Reagan's tendency to pursue what amounts in Peking's eyes to a "rwo China" policy. Throughout his campaign, he indicated that he believed the United States should have a more "official" relationship with Taiwan, which since 1979 has had only "unofficial" links with the United States.

Those statements produced two sets of responses. Taiwan was enthusiastic and has been lobbying for more access in Washington to official circles and for the United States to sell it the advanced F-16 fighter that it previously was refused.

Peking was angry. State Department experts believe the Chinese have considered curbing the growing contacts if the Reagan administration does not stop talking about Taiwan and fails to follow the path charted by the Carter administration. In particular, China has sought a declaration that the administration supports the normalization communique of 1979 as the basis of relations, and not the Taiwan Act passed by Congress. It would also like a sign that the administration is interested in building upon the security links with China that were begun in the past administration.

The Reagan administration, in a little-noticed statement, did affirm that it would live up to the (Continued on Page 2, Col. 7)

Young Saudis Worry About Oil Policy, Rapid Change WORLD NEWS BRIEF

By Joseph Fitchett International Herald Tribune

JIDDA - Seated in a Danishstyle leather armchair at a videotape club in Saudi Arahia's commercial capital, a government official sofily discussed his worries about the high rate of oil production in Saudi Arahia.

"We're selling too much too fast, and I'm afraid of the bewildering progress that is being forced on us. For example, divorce has become a problem because families are 100 preoccupied with money to work out their problems patiently. The new houses are too big: who will clean them if the day ever comes when we can no longer have wage-slaves from outside and have to look after ourselves?" he

Saudi businessman, also spending his evening at the club to watch films in a country where public movies are forhidden, chipped in: "If we're producing so much oil just for the good of the United States, we should be getting a political return. If we don't, it will become a political issue sooner or later."

Similar complaints are common among U.S.-educated Saudis. who represent the elite of the country's growing middle class, when they are asked about how much oil should be pumped and sold hy Saudi Arahia.

Sole Source

There are no public opinion polls in Saudi Arabia, and no direct political pressure on the ruling Saud family to modify its decision to produce as much oil as Saudi Arabia can to stabilize world oil markets. But Saudi security services monitor attitudes toward the issue of oil production, which is the sole source of Saudi wealth and the reason for international interest in the kingdom.

"There are two broad categories of opinion in the kingdom, depending on whether or not people have heen educated in the West," explained an official who sees the monthly reports, "People who only know Saudi Arabia are unthinkingly grateful for the oil-brought progress that has transformed this country's infrastructure and life. But Saudis with international experience think — and say — that Saudi Arahia is selling too much oil too cheap," he said Many strands combine to weave this widely held Saudi view that the kingdom is making concessions insufficiently appreciated in the

"I think that we should only produce enough oil to obtain the cash we need to run the country." a Saudi journalist said, adding: "Europeans and especially Americans exaggerate the problem of oil to squeeze us more. If they want us to give more, they should give us more in return."

Financial Needs

Officials repeatedly point out that Saudi Arabia could still meet its financial needs if it slashed production to half or even a third of current levels. "But the impact on the West would be immediate factory closings and longer lines of unemployed," Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani told reporters last week.

In a separate speech, Sheikh Yamani was quoted as saying that Saudi Arabia might export less oil if Iran and Iraq boost their own exports after the Gulf war ends. But he indicated that this would not be an oil-price squeeze hut rather another example of Saudi Arahia's desire to use its strong oil capacity to play an influential swing role among the oil-exporting nations. To maintain a halance in supply and demand, he said. "Shall we ask Algeria and Nigeria and Indonesia, which need every dollar they can get for their development, to reduce their production?

Saudi Arabia, in contrast, is paying a domestic price for maintaining high production to win Western influence, officials said. However, this feeling of leverage over the West both gratifies and worries the educated generation. "I think that we should give oil to all the people who need it." a Saudi government official said. "I've traveled in Asia and Africa, and I hate to see people starving, so I would give them oil even if they are Communists or Jews."

Political Factors

The same official continued: "But I also think other countries should give them food instead of hurning it or throwing it into the sea when they have too much, like the United States does. Governments think of their own interests, not mankind's '

Saudi Arahia's interest, officials said, is not necessarily to produce so much oil, even at current high prices. However, political factors have convinced Saudi Arabia's leaders to maintain high produc-tion and push forward with a vast industrialization plan that absorbs oil earnings.

Most observers say that Crown Prince Fahd has successfully imposed his view that Saudi Arabia sbould produce oil far beyond its financial needs to win influence in the West -- a view that was vindicated when Saudi Arabia was able to step into the gap caused by the lran-lraq war.
"But it is important to understand that Saudi Arabia did not have to adopt this [strategy of meeting world oil demand]."

Farouk Akhdar, a senior Saudi strategist told a U.S. audience recently. Logically, he said, it would have been "far better for us to slow down our growth and limit oil exports to the amount needed to cover our immediate and more moderate development needs."

Conservative Approach

This more conservative approach would have brought more manageable change in Saudi Ara-even more rapid increases in the price of oil ... chronic supply shortages, more inflation, slower growth and higher unemployment in the West. It would have meant fewer imports by Saudi Arabia from the West and therefore less recycling of what some in the West have elected to call perrodollars."

Mr. Akhdar said. He asked his audience: "The Western world has benefited greatly from the kingdom's policy on oil and industrialization ... hut how has Saudi Arahia henefited from this policy of international cooperation and responsibility? What can the West do for Saudi Árahia?"

This debate apparently contin-ues in Saudi Arabia's ruling circles about what the country can expect

The U.S. argument, as explained by diplomats, is that the United States is Saudi Arahia's ultimate defense against the Soviet Union. Many Saudi leaders accept the view that the Kremlin has its eye on the Gulf to supply its own growing energy needs and to gain global economic leverage.

The prompt arrival of U.S. AWACS planes during the Iranlraq war was the most explicit proof yet of the U.S. commitment to defend Saudi Arahia - and it affected the Saudi decision to make good the last oil supplies from Iran and Iraq, diplomats

This fear helps explain Saudi re-luctance to see U.S. troops based within easy striking distance of the oilfields. It also explains why many influ-

The first, the di-rect result of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, con-cerns the U.S. security role in the Gulf. The Carter administration, while talking of dire threats to world security, moved gingerly. It refused to offer Pakistan more than what amounted to symbolic aid and would not give it an ironclad security guarantee for fear of antagonizing India.

Mr. Reagan has talked of a U.S. military presence in the region, but as Mr. Haig said, it is difficult to find a country that would accept a permanent garrison of U.S. troops. The key countries in the area are Iran, Saudi Arabia and Iraq, and the United States has diplomatic relations only with Saudi Arabia.

Any long-term policy must consider ways of increasing U.S. influence in the region, but experts point out that at the recent Islamic Conference in Taif, Saudi Arabia. the emphasis was not on ridding Afghanistan of Soviet troops hut on ending Israeli domination over the West Bank and Jerusalem.

Mr. Haig, aware that Israeli Mr. Haig, aware that Israeli elections are to be held this summer, is in no rush to plunge into the complexities of the Egyptian-Israeli negotiations on Palestinian autonomy. Washington Post Service PARIS - The French Commnnist Party last weekend reinforced a racist image it has been increasingly promoting of itself in an ap-parent search for votes for party leader Georges Marchais in this spring's presidential elections. On Saturday afternoon Commu nist Mayor Robert Hue of the Paris suburb of Montigny-les-Cormeilles led a demonstration at a housing project under the windows of a Moroccan family with right children. The family had been accused by name in local party leaflets of being drug traffickers. The local police commissioner fn answer to some skeptical questioning, he insisted that he was confident of winning the elections. The skepticism stemmed from current polls that give him only 11 percent of the vote — or up to 17 percent should the other two to withdraw — against roughly 31 percent for Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and about 28 percent for François Mitterrand, the Socialist candidate. Nevertheless, Mr. Chirac, an effective campaigner, intends to campaign hard, with the help of party machinery that is largely loy-al to him and that may be more widely and more effectively organized than that of any of the other

If the French electorate is thought of as divided into two large families with the right and center-right (Gaullists and Giscardians) on one side, and the left and center-left (Communists and Soci-alists) on the other, the electoral strength of each side is not far from being even. In the second round of the 1974 elections, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, supported by the Gaullists, defeated Mr. Mitter-rand, supported by the Commu-nists by less than 2 percent.

There is considerable bad feelof France's Gaullists, but it is a ing between the Socialists and the Communists this time, and most analysts believe that in the first round, at least, the two electorates will remain separate, with the Socialists far outdrawing the Communists. blue-collar racism you have in America, but which the French Communists used to light against. His real constituency is the same as George Wallace's." Pattern of Racial Overtones The weekend incident fits into an emerging pattern of actions and statements with clear racial overtones by Communist municipalities throughout the country. The first incident to receive publicity came on Christmas Eve, when a dormitory intended to house 318 black workers from Mali was sacked and bulldozed by Communist strongarm squads in the sub-urb of Vitry-sur-Seine. The Communist mayor denied witnesses' reports printed in national newspa-pers that he led the squads; he said appealing to the the same kind of calm the situation A week later the head of the Paris Mosque, Rector Si Hamza Boubakeur, publicly called on Mr. Marchais to denounce the action speedily "to avoid a serious breach between the Communist Party and the Moslem proletariat in France and the rest of the world," The party leader eventually replied in an open letter in the party organ L'Humanite, saying that he "approves without reservation" the action of 'my friend Mayor Paul Mercieca of Vitry." In Ivry-sur-Seine, a Communist town councilor sent covering letters for applications for the municipality's summer camps that said there would be a quota of 15 per-cent for children of foreigners. The letter said the town authorities wanted to fight against the government's policy of turning the Com-munist suburbs into ghettos.

Government Blamed

Mr. Marchais tries to downplay the racial element by blanning the immigration policies of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's government in a period of economic downturn. He accuses the government of hypocritically encouraging illegal immigrant workers while officially encouraging the legal ones to go home. In the case of Vitry, Mr. Marchais accused the Giscardist mayor of a neighboring town. who had closed for repairs his municipality's dormitory for Malians, of trying to foist his race problems on a Communist-run city.

The indications are that the Marchais strategy is a measure to stave off what could be the party's poorest electoral showing since World War H. The party tradition-ally gets 20 percent of the vote in national elections. Huge number of educated, traditional Communist voters dedicated to the leftist unity pact that their party sabo-taged in 1978 are preparing to punish their own leaders by voting for Socialist Party candidate Francois Mitterrand on the first round of the elections April 26 without waiting for the runoff between the two leading contenders.

The Communist Party has been trying to compensate for the massive losses it expects among people such as schoolteachers by registering unorganized, largely nonpolitical elements in party-controlled towns. Nationally, 6 to 9 percent of the population is estimated to stered. The Marchais policy is also likely to cost the party its considerable vote in France's large, black-popu-tated Caribbean islands of Martinique and Guadeloupe, whose natives are legally French citizens who vote as part of metropolitan France. The Martinique Communist Party has called for abstention. The Guadeloupe party is expected to follow.

Despite the Reagan administra-tion's feeling that the Carter policy was counterproductive, it retains strong support within Congress and a large number of church and other interest groups. The relatively weak liberals, who had pressed for an early settlement of the hostage crisis, have long been battered by the fundamentalists. For more than a year, the fundamentalist faction used the liberals' stand on the embassy seizure and the holding of the hostages to discredit them as being soft toward the West. Now the liberals are counterattacking, accusing Pre-mier Mohammed Ali Rajai — who won his office after winning the backing of the fundamentalists — of having sold out by releasing the hostages too cheaply.

In effect, the Bani-Sadr liberals are attempting to do to the fundamentalists what the fundamentalists did to them. In the Majlis, which is dominated by the Islamic Republican Party, a bloc of independent members last week de-manded an investigation of the settlement with the United States. Mr. Rajai and the Majlis speaker, Hojatoleslam Hashemi Rafsanjani, have had to defend the settlement against charges that none of the shah's wealth had been recovcred and that the roughly $3 billion that Iran received from its frozen assets was far less than the $24 billion in "guarantees" that the film "The Good, the Bad and the Uranian negotiators had called for. #### At the Khyber Pass

Nothing would better suit the Soviet Union than a deal that sanitized its seizure of Afghanistan, cut off help to the insurgents from Pakistan and relieved pressure on its occupation army of 80,000. If that is the purpose of Pakistan's overture to the Soviet puppet regime in Kabul, there is reason for concern. What is Moscow threatening to elicit this nervousness?

But Pakistan's diplomacy has heen so oblique that it may also serve as a useful exploration. Pakistan insists that no recognition is implied by its willingness to meet the Afghan foreign minister — unofficially but in the presence of a United Nations representative. At the same time, Pakistan belped soften the views of Afghanistan that an Islamic conference in Saudi Arabia has expressed: its resolution deplored foreign "intervention" without ever naming the Soviet Union.

If Pakistan means what it says - that it will not recognize the Kabul regime until the invaders bave withdrawn and Afghanistan is once again an independent, nonaligned state - there may be some value in the contact. Some soundings across the Khyber Pass can disclose whether Moscow will consider a strategic retreat from a conflict that bas propelled 1.4 million Afghans across the mountainous border into refugee camps in Paki-

Our guess is that Moscow is not yet ready for a deal. In that case, the Pakistani initiative can be a useful prod to Washington's eurrent policy review. The Reagan administration needs to decide how much belp to provide to the insurgents, apparently financed in part by Saudi Arabia, and wbat terms to set for an end of such support. Pakistan may also be a supplicant again for direct U.S. aid. And France bas proposed a peace conference of unclear value.

The overriding U.S. concern bas been to prevent a permanent Soviet military deployment in Afghanistan, which would extend Moscow's reach toward the Gulf. And any political settlement ought to reaffirm the principle that Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan is unacceptable. While the Pakistanis are balancing on the high wire, let the United States erect a firm net of principle beneath them.

Budget: The Good Old Days?

President Reagan's theory of the federal budget seems to take the year 1960 as the point after which things began to go wrong. That, certainly, is the thought with which he opened his speech on economic policy last week, and that seems to be the controlling view as his administration initiates the most powerful challenge of the past generation to the conventional budget. U.S. politics is now coming into a profoundly interesting time as the traditional ideas about public spending are suddenly ordered to stand up and account for themselves. That's a highly useful exercise, and there bave been more than enough mistakes of public judgment over the past 21 years. But it would be inane to succumb to the myth of the 1950s as a better, more orderly time for Americans, from which they bave slipped through self-indulgence and inflation.

There is now an implication that Eisenbower policy is the new administration's intellectual point of reference as it embarks on this daring attempt to rewrite the budget. Perhaps Mr. Reagan's challenge is not only to Mr. Carter's last budget as it stands, but to the 21 years of social initiatives that have transformed it. Certainly this is an inference that can be drawn from much of the diffuse complaint about the social programs and about increased federal involvements in people's lives generally. But are Americans really worse off now than then? How would you measure the change? And what did the federhave these things straight if we are to know what we are trying to achieve in this reordering of budget priorities and commitments.

In fact, Americans are a great deal richer than they were in 1960. Per capita, after federal taxes and after inflation, the average income is up by two-thirds. But money is bardly what counts in the end. One basic measure of the standard of living is life itself. The average American's life expectancy now is nearly 74 years, more than four years longer than in 1960. Part of it bas nothing directly to do with money; physical exercise, for example, is now in fashion. But much of the progress reflects the public money pumped into public bealth, not only into the hospitals and research laboratories, but into those wildly expensive sewage treatment plants, and into the community action programs that showed isolated and ignorant people how to get bealth care. The infant mortality rate is always a good indicator of a country's social organization. After a long period of stagnation it began moving rapidly downward again in the late 1960s. Its relationship to Medicaid and food stamps is beyond argument. Before you decide that food stamps are too expensive, consider carefully what they Surely another basic element in the standard of living is access to education - in the United States, the key to equality of opportunity. In 1960, there were fewer than 4 million students enrolled in colleges and universities. This year, there are more than 12 million. That couldn't have been accomplished without federal money for both the institutions and the students. Perhaps some of that aid can now be scaled down a little. But before you take your pencil to that part of the budget, remember that it has bought opportunity for many millions of young Americans to whom, in an earlier generation, it would have been foreclosed.

The list can be carried on at length. Housing standards are higher. Pensions are more generous, and personal economic security in general is better protected. For most people, working conditions have improved. None of these things was accomplished solely with federal money, but none of them would have been likely without it.

There's a difference between history and nostalgia. The 1950s were no halcyon time of dom and private diligenc United States in those years was a society under strain. Inflation was held in check, but at a cost of three recessions in eight years and exceedingly slow growth of incomes. The question isn't whether the country can do that again, but whether it can't do better.

It's true that Americans are living currently beyond their means. It's true that the United States is going to have to cut down a little, beginning with the federal budget, to restrain inflation. But it's also true that the federal budget is inseparable from the American standard of living. If it's the last 21 years that are under challenge, there's an obligation to remember what those 21 years bave brought. By no means can all of it be measured merely in money. This ought to be the starting point of understanding in the administration's effort to bring the budget under control. THE WASHINGTON POST.

The West's Dissonant Voices

Europe would not be Europe if the approving welcome for the new Washington policies were not modified by a "but." Some voices object to the U.S. aim to achieve military superiority over the Russians, forgetting that talk about superiority is in any case academie when one is still so far from equality.

Others are divided about the definition of equality and whether it involves nullifying the Soviet advantage achieved by invading Afghanistan and intervening in places like Ethiopia, Angola and Cambodia. Can Europe's voices be brought into unison? And if so, will that unison harmonize with the new U.S. voice? Can a common Western policy he forged to meet the challenge and threat of growing Soviet power?

The Reagan view of the world is one in which the United States is seen as engaged in a worldwide confrontation with the Soviet Union, with the Middle East as one of the main areas in which the two superpowers are locked in a struggle for influence.

... Although they [the Gulf states] are wary of Western domination, they are even more wary of attempts by the Soviet Union to undermine them ...

But they would much prefer to make their own arrangements for protection, provided that waitiing at a discreet distance is a powerful and convincing force which can be called on when necessary, but which will not impose itself unduly, or act in a way likely to antagonize the Soviet Union and thus increase instability rather than reduce it.

PORTSMOUTH, England — The battleship Dreadnought, the last word of progress in naval architecture, was launched here yesterday in a ceremony presided over by King Edward. The effect it is likely to have on the future shiphuilding of the world's navies must indeed be considered 10 inaugurate a new era. Already, before complete details of its design, construction and equipment are known, other nations are preparing to duplicate the type, which has been brought about by the the lessons of war in the Far East. The designers of the ship have comhined the largest possible number of heavy guns with a displacement consistent with the existent facilities for docking such a vessel.

PARIS - Today's editorial in the Herald reads: "A great many women in Great Britain are rising against the dictum of tyrannous dressmakers, reviving the barbarous fashion of skirts so lengthy that they sweep the ground. Two woman members of Parliament, Miss Rathbone and Miss Picton-Turberville. 'deplore the return to long skirts as a reaction against personal comfirst and physical liberty. One of the most re-markable things about fashion's enslavement of women is its disregard of the most prevalent masculine taste. Given the normal desire of women to please the opposite sex, it is astonishing how many pursue a course of personal adornment that is repugnant to the latter."

For the past week, ARD, one of the two national networks, and its Austrian counterpart ORF, have been exposing audiences of mil-lions at prime time to a three-part documentary series on the crimes committed against the Germans during World War II.

And predictably, the series has become the center of considerable controversy, and not merely be-cause it raises a touchy question;

Lynch Justice

Well, as the Bavarian Broadcasting Corporation, producer of the series, maintains, there were many. There was the forced flight and subsequent expulsion of millions of Germans from East Prussia and the former German territories of Poland. There was the lyoch justice against Germans in Prague and the Czechoslovak Sudenten-land. There were crimes that range the spectrum from the rape of German women by Soviet soldiers marching westward, to the British-U.S. firebomhing of Dresden in February, 1945 — a raid that is believed to have taken more lives than the nuclear attack on Hiroshi-

The scenes, culled from old beyond description. The interviews with tearful, choked-up surviving victims and witnesses to this "other holocaust" are pregnant

It is, of course, all true, and what has been shown to West Germans and Austrians on the three hour-long segments, really did happen. No one challenges that. Yet, Flucht und Vertreibung —

Flight and Expulsion - as the series is called, raises numerous knotty questions: not so much about the past as the present.

Criticism

Perhaps the most troubling as-pect of the series is that it offers nnly a modicum of causality hy virtually - albeit not completely —ignoring the fact that it was Hit-ler's war of aggression and genoci-dal racist policy which led up to Germany's defeat and the wartime atrocities being shown on the screen.

Criticism of this particular aspect was sharpest the other day during a 90-minute Austrian TV discussion whose panelists included nnt only one of the two co-di-recturs of the series, Eva Berthuld, hut recently expatriated Soviet au-

Mr. Kopelev was a Red Army major and propaganda officer dur-ing the war and spent more than a decade in the Gulag for exposing and trying to stop precisely the same atrocities by Soviet soldiers shown in the documentary. His crime, as it was called in those days, was displaying compassion and sympathy for the enemy. "What the film depicts," he said.

"is only all too true. What it fails in depict is how it came about." In other words, if the Germans had not first moved eastward, virtually to the gates of Moscow, the Russians would never have come

Yet, the series is not a kind of "reverse holocaust," a suggestion that its makers deny with indignation.

Even if it were, then it would be hus a minute counterweight to the thousands of hours of air time West Germany TV has already de-voted to the Third Reich and its crimes. Long before the fictional, U.S.-made "Holocaust" series flickered across TV screens here two years ago, West German viewers were accustomed to virtual innundation with televized retros-pectives of their own history.

From TV

It has nften been said that postwar West Germans know little about the Nazi past — because of the nmissions of schoolbooks and the commissions of teachers. What they do know, however, they know largely from television.

Under these circumstances, the ARD networks should perhaps not ed to "German sins" versus "German suffering" produces a prov-able ratio of several hundred to two. Flucht und Vertreibung is in-deed but the second time since 1955 that West German TV has dealt with expulsion and exodus from the East.

But why is it being shown now and why a series of such patent causal omissions?

Political pressure from the various expelled groups, whose constituency is strongest in Bavaria, is undoubtedly a reason though it has not been proffered as an offi-ment, there is the distinct danger that West German TV has just given a stamp of authority to horror tales which the extremist press has been propagating and embellishing for years. It is one thing for radical rightist papers to reiterate these claims and charges, quite another matter for the ARD to say it on

Even more disturbing is the fact that the documentary series has been shown at precisely a time when neo-Nazi movements are flexing their muscles, becoming more violent, and are openly pro-pagating the line that "The Holocaust is a figment of imagination, an edifice of lies in an anti-German propaganda campaign."

After a week of watching the three installments, none of which generated anywhere near the andience response or viewer ratings as "Holocaust" two years ago, one is left with a feeling of disconsolate-

German nation. Whatever its original intention. the series has pandered to a popular notion here that the Germans bear no responsibility for Hitler and the Third Reich, that they were indeed but victims.

Defending herself in the discussion with Mr. Kopelev the other night, co-director Mrs. Berthold said her only aim had been "to make people feel compassion and to show them the horrors of war."

Fears on Reagan's Rhetoric

By David S. Broder

EVANSTON, III. — Ronald Reagan is doing all right so far in the suburbs and small cities of the Midwest and West, but there seems to be some concern about the "belligerence" of his foreign-policy comments. In part, that is the carryover of the "warmonger" label that Jimmy Carter tried to pin on him in last fall's campaign. But the fear has been rekindled by some of Mr. Reagan's and Secretary of State Alexander Haig's statements in the opening weeks of the new administration.

Personally, I am not persuaded that there is much to be disturbed about, in what Mr. Reagan and Mr. Haig have had to say. But when you hear the same concern expressed, in almost the same words, hy townspeople, journalists and students in places as diverse as Salt Lake City, Grand Junction, Topeka, Madison and Evanston as I did last week - then it begins to register. What triggered the worries were the Reagan comments at his first press conference, suggesting that,

There is a Communist plan for world conquest, and its final step is to conquer the United States." Old Rhetoric Now, I assume that the computers in the Kremlin Bureau of American Affairs have all that old Reagan rhetoric coded and indexed, so Brezhnev and Co. can bardly be surprised to hear him saying what he is saying.

The second reason why I doubt they find this language "provoca-tive" is that Mr. Reagan has no interest in disturbing or challenging the Soviet regime at home.

My impression is that what bothered Moscow about Mr. Carter was his tendency, in his first two years in office, to agitate the "human rights" issue. "Human rights," to them, is an issue of internal security and the protection of their own authoritarian regime. I doubt very much that the Reagan language about Russia's inclination to expand its external empire is one bit as "provocative" in Soviet eyes, as Mr. Carter's correspondence with celebrated Soviet ssidents or his public championing of their cause

Frightened

Mr. Reagan has turned off the 'human rights" rhetoric and is plainly prepared to take a live-and-let-live attitude toward internal Soviet repression. He is being very cautious in his comments on the Polish situation, which, far more than any provocation from Washington, might cause the Russians to move their armed forces into ac-

An Absorbing 'Voyage'

By Thomas Quinn Curriss

International Herald Tribune PARIS — Alain Cavalier's new film, "Us etrange voyage," recipient of I the Prix Louis Delluc, will hold your attention. Of unaderned but effective structure, it succeeds in casting a binding spell, with a peculiar premise as its springboard.

A middle-aged artist of Trayes invites his old mother to come from Paris by train for a brief visit. He waits for her at the station, but she fails to arrive and he goes to Paris to discover that she left her residence for the journey. He informs the police, but no trace of her can be found. Greatly disturbed, he enlists his adolescent daughter (estranged by the Greatly disturbed, he enlists his adolescent daughter (estranged by the rupture of his marriage) to accompany him on an investigation. They walk the railroad line from Troyes to Paris on what seems n futile himt. The search for the missing old lady unites father and child in sympathetic understanding that bridges the generation gap.

The script is, so to speak, a two-hander. The aged mother who vanishes is never seen and the subordinate characters are of no importance, the story centering on the father-daughter relationship. Jean Rochefort as the anxiety-ridden artist provides a portrayal of subtlety and depth as the enigmatic protagonist of doleful demeanor. The part of the defiant girl is more banal, filled with chiches obout youth in revolt, but it is given winning nuance by Camille de Casabianca, the gifted director's gifted daughter. In all, a film of quality and much originality.

"The Mirror Crack'd" (at the Publicis Champs-Elysees, the Paramount Odeon and the Studio Medicis in English) is an Agatha Christie whodunit set before the cameras. Its mysterious murders take place in an English country town which is invaded by an American film company to shoot an epic about Mary, Queen of Scots.

As it is set in the early 1950s, its cast contains several old favorites of the era. There is Elizabeth Taylor as a neurotic star (to be the Mary of the movie), Rock Hudson as her director-husband intent on her making a comeback, Kim Novak as an ambitious floozie of the flicks (inappropriately assigned to be Elizabeth I) and Tony Curtis as a coarse Hollywood producer. Geraldine Chaptin, of later vintage, is the star's suspicious secretary and Angela Lansbury with enormous authority and humor impersonates Miss Marple, the regulation Christie lady sleuth.

Directed by Guy Hamilton in expansive manner, it is all-star-cast thriller of style and polish. What it lacks is the Hitchcock touch, though its solution is shrewdly calculated to surprise and its performances are amusing with the veterans giving slight parodies of their former selves.

Claude Vajda's "Ces Malades qui nons gouverneut" (nt the Saint-Andre-des-Arts) is a 3½-hour documentary, composed of newsreel footage and sidelight interviews, about recent rulers whose ill health probably played a part in their world-shaking decisions.

Stalin, according to his Russian physicians, was stricken with early arteriosclerosis which ossified his trunking and brought on persecution mania. He was ridden with distrust, but had idiotic confidence in his pact with Hitler. When his agents informed him that German troops were massing on the border, he took no beed and Russia was unprepared for the 1941 Nazi invasion. Near the end of his life he ordered the arrest of his doctors (who were Jewish) and planned to hang them publicly and then stir anti-Semitic riots and in the guise of a protective measure send all Jews to Siberia.

Hitler had nervous hysteria and fits of madness. Mussolini had an ulcerated stomach. Chamberlain on his mission to Munich had chronic indigestion which developed into cancer; Franco had Parkinson's disease in his old age and Churchill's mind wandered in late years. John F. Kennedy was obliged to wear a steel back-brace and diet on baby food. Franklin D. Roosevelt was at death's door at Yalta. When he died three months later Stalin, according to Elliott Roosevelt, suspected that the president had been poisoned and demanded an autopsy, a request that Eleanor Roosevelt refused.

The message here is obvious. If an airplane pilot, as it argues, must undergo physical examination to test his finess, why not those who sway the lives of millions. Dwight D. Eisenhower's illness during his first term was widely reported and his condition was known when he stood for re-Due to Fuel Cost election, but the physical and mental states of the others were kept secret. Although the guide offers no surprises to observers of the French gastronomic scene it does signal renewed interest in the type of more classic cuisine offered at Taillevent and La Mere Blanc, and a bit less fanfare for Nouvelle Cuisine, which Gault and Millau were among the first to promote.

The 800-page guide, which lists 4,500 restaurants and hotels in France, Belgium, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. now includes 11 restaurants with a four-toque rating. Of these, six have been singled out this year as meriting special note. They are La Mere Blanc, Paul Bocuse in Collooges-nu-Mont-d'Or, Michel Guerard in Eugenie-les-Baios, Alain Chapel in Mionnay, Troisgros in Roanne and Girardet in Crissier, Switzerland. #### A Multilingual Trove From 14th-Century Yemen

By John Noble Wilford

New York Tomes Service TEW YORK - In 14th-century Yemen, then a thriving place along trade routes to the Orient, there was a king with an intellectual bent. He wrote scientific tracts, including one on the cultivation of grains, and was knowledgeable in health and astronomy. But his magnum opus was n six-language dictionary, a work of impeccable scholarship.

He compiled about 1,200 familiar and important words in Arabic and in parallel columns gave the words of comparable meaning in four and often five other languages Persian, Turkic, late Byzantine Greek, Cilician Armenian and Mongol It was a striking proto-type of today's multilanguage dic-

Recently Rediscovered The first word in his lexicon was the Arabic for God, Allah, fol-lowed by Khuday in Persian, Ten-gri in Turkic, O-Theos in Greek and Assuars in Armenian. The Mongol word, also Tengri, was not included. The king also listed words pertaining among other things, to food, clothing horse-manship, entertainment, health and the female anatomy.

Over the centuries the dictionary became lost or forgotten until the early 1970s, when Lebanese scholars called it to the attention of Dr. Tibor Halasi-Kun, a Columbia University philologist. The discov-ery was much like an archaeological find, in that it exposed to the modern mind bittle-known facets of a past culture.

Working from microfilm copies — the original manuscript is in San'a, the capital of Yemen — scholars in the United States and Hungary have spent the last five years deciphering the dicomary and expect to publish it in the next year or so, with English and French translations. The publication will be in Archivum Ottomancum, a periodical dealing in Middle East scholarship.

Dr. Peter B. Golden, one of the decipherers and an associate professor of history at the Newark campus of Rutgers University, said in an interview that the Rasulid Hexaglot, as the dictionary is called, is proving to be "extremely valuable" as a window into the Islamic world of the Middle Ages and for its clues to the evolution of several major languages.

Archaic Remnants

Dr. Golden, who is working on the Greek part of the manuscript, said that he had encountered many words that have archaic endings or do not even exist in modern Greek. They are remnants of a Greek dia-lect spoken in the Middle Ages in Cyprus and Asia Minor, he said, parently knew or felt it might need and thus represent a link between to know several languages. Persian classical and modern Greek, Similarly, the Armenian language in the Hexaglot is a medieval form that is no longer used but was spoken in Cilicia, the coastal region of what is now southeastern Turkey. Of particular fascination to the scholars were the Mongol entries. The language was spoken to Persia after its conquest by the successors of Genghis Khan. But Dr. Golden said that there had been "very little material" on this version of Mongol and so the discovery is extremely important to philology." Lajos Ligeti, of the University of Budapest, is deciphering the Mon-gol entries, and Dr. Edmuod Schutz, also of Budapest, is working on the Armenian portion.

Dr. Halasi-Kun, whose specialty is Turkic, said that the dictionary is interesting from a historical point of view because it shows that "in the Middle Ages, Yemen was not such a backwater place." The ruling class, at any rate, ap-was the common language in the eastern Islamic world io those days, although Turkic was fre-quently used by the military-political caste. The other languages must have been useful in commerce, for Yemen was an important center of trade in the 14th century. The discovery of new trade routes, particularly after Vasco da

Gama's voyages in the late 15th century, led to Yemen's decline. Between 1363 and 1377, during Yemen's ascendancy, the ruler was Al-Malik al-Afdal Dirgham ad-Din Al-Ahbas, of the Rasulid dynasty. The king, according to Dr. Golden, "was not a professional lexicographer as we know the term, but a highly literate, cultivated man and a meticulous scholar with cosmopolitan interests, as shown by his choice of words, subjects and languages." Judging by the Hexaglot, Dr. Golden said, the ruling class of cuisine and astronomy. The king's many references to the female anatomy, he noted, "were without any seemingly prurient interest." As an example of how the dictionary produces insights into life at that time and place, there are words for raincoat in most of the languages — which surprised the scholars. In Arabic, however, there tive phrase, meaning literally a gar-ment that repels the rain, suggesting that raincoats were not common in Arabie-speaking areas. Little is known of the lexicographer-king's personal life or reign, except that his dictionary indicates he must have been an avid falconer and may have been worried about an expanding waistline. Listed to the dictionary, in no npparent con-text, is the Arabie word meaning the fold of fat that begins to develop around the middle.

British Vintages Gaining in Popularity.

By Terry Robards

New York Times Service NEWFNT, England — Alan McKechnie and his colleagues are waging war against nature here in the vineyards of Gloucestershire, trying to demonstrate that good wines can be produced in the capri-cious climate of the vest country of England. Driven partly by parriotism and partly by economics, they are making wines that are suddenly gaining popularity in the British Isles. "The tourists and everyone else treated English wine as a joke," McKechnie said, but now it's in demand."

He heads the McKechnie Wine Company Ltd., which produces Three Choirs wine, and he owns Fairfields Fruit Farms Ltd., which operates orchards. Like many other British apple farmers, McKechnie is feeling stiff competition from beavy imports of low-priced apples from France and Spain. So he and many others have been planting grapes instead.

Nobody here suggests that Britain will ever challenge the wine-making supremacy of France, Italy or Germany, but some 200 wineries are operating in this country now, most of them very new. About two dozen are actually producing commercial quantides.

"All of n sudden, people have realized it can be done," said John Thornburn, general manager of Three Choirs, "and we're doing it. Farmers have got a few spare acres and are going into it." McKechnie adds: "A lot of people can't believe we're actually growing grapes out of doors. They think perhaps we've got a big greenhouse."

In a sense the new wine makers are recapturing an English tradition, for this became a major wine-producing country after the Romans brought grapevin here in the third century. Later, when Britannia ruled the waves and had easy access to the European wines, virtually all of the vincyards were abandoned.

Their comeback not only reflects an effort by farmers to find more profitable crops but also represents a combination of patriotism and personal economics for consumers. Confronted with sharply esfinding it easy to revert to their own country's wines, even if they too are expensive. Resentment over low-priced agricultural imports in general from other Commoo Market countries also plays a role. Three Choirs is a pleasant blended white made from two German grape varieties that have proven durable in the British elimate. These are the muellerthurgau and the reichensteiner, and most other English wineries are concentrating on the same varieties. The best German grape, the riesling, fails to achieve sufficient ripeness here. The climate is simply too arduous for the better red grapes.

"There's been a tendency to go the German way because we're at about the same latitude," said Thornburn. "About 95 percent of the English wines are German-based."

They resemble German wines in taste, although they rarely achieve the richness of n Rhine or Mosel from a great vintage. The English wines are drier and more austere, often with touches of earthiness and acidity. They are expensive, too, at $7 to $10 a bottle, but the wineries are selling all they can produce.

Three Choirs was in the vanguard of the revival, planting its first vines in 1972. Four years are normally required for vines to reach commercial poten-tial, so Three Choirs was ready when the sun broke through the pervasive British overcast four years lat-er. "We clicked for the magical 76 summer, followed by four of the most diabolical summers you could imagine, including the last one," said Thornburn.

Three Choirs produced 17 tons of grapes from roughly three acres of vines in 1976. In 1980 only seven tons of grapes came from six acres of vines, reflecting the difficult weather. Now there are 18

Other wineries have experienced similarly erratic production. In Kent, the Penshurst vineyards yielded 14,000 bottles in 1976, 7,000 in 1977, 2,000 in 1978, 5,000 in 1979 and probably about 1,500 last year.

EF Hutton Fourth Quarter sets new records.

New York, January 27 1981

The E.F. Hutton Group's earnings and revenues for the fourth quarter set records for the large Investment Firm, Robert Fomon, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, announced today.

Preliminary earnings for the fourth quarter ended December 31, 1980 were $ 23.3 million, up from $ 11.1 million earned in the comparable quarter of 1979, an increase of 110%. Hutton's previous peak was in the second quarter of 1980 when it netted $ 21.3 million. Earnings per share were $ 1.67 versus $ 0.87 for the prior year's fourth quarter. Revenues for the period were $ 313 million, 42% above the $ 220 million in the same period of 1979.

Preliminary earnings for the year were $82.6 million compared to $37.3 million last year, an increase of 121%. It was the firm's third consecutive year of record earnings. Earnings per share were $ 6.16 compared with $ 2.90 in 1979. Revenues for the year exeeded one billion dollars for the first time, reaching $ 1.1 billion verus $ 750 million in 1979.

Mr. Fomon said, "our record results in the fourth quarter came from auspicious achievements by virtually every component of the firm. Our main-frame brokerage activities were very strong, benefiting from the high level of equity trading volume as well as large tax shelter, insurance and other income. Moreover, Investment Banking revenues were up very sharply in both the corporate and public finance sectors. Also aiding results was net interest income which hit a new high, reflecting lofty interest rates and reduced firm borrowings.

Mr. Fomon commented that, "the outlook in the many financial markets for the weeks immediately ahead is unsettled, but we think that the year should be a good one overall". He added, "a growing perception of the constructive fiscal steps which we believe the Reagan administration will be proposing shortly should aid the investment environment".

NEW YORK — Unexpectedly atrong business produced an increase in fourth quarter U.S. corporation earnings.

A survey of 444 major corporations shows a 10-percent rise in after-tax profits from the 1979 fourth quarter. The outlook for corporate profits this year is weak, especially in the first half. Cost pressures will continue strong, and most economists expect real GNP to be not much better than flat in the first two quarters.

Now, steelmen worry that continuing high nterest rates are halting and perhaps reversing the recovery Earnings gains in the oil iodustry were made more diffi-cult by the exceptionally high profit levels of the 1979 quar-ter; but in addition, the industry's slight overall earnings increase masked o switch. some other industries:

 Banks: Most banks' earnings were burt by high and volatile interest rates in the fourth quarter, and many reports would have been even worse except for nonrecurring profits from year-end sales of real estate and other assets. • Chemicals: Profits begao improving to the fourth quarter. The improvement is expected to continue, but executives decline to make any predictions.

• Electrical equipment: Earnings exceeded expectations because consumers continued to spend oo durables in spite of high interest rates. Analysts say the first-quarter outlook is clouded by high interest rates and the sluggish economy.

 Tires and rubber: The industry remains depressed by low auto and truck production, but the fourth quarter was stronger than anticipated. Profits were bolstered by im-proved replacement-tire sales, a spurt in demand from automakers when the 1981 cars were introduced and favorable year-end adjustments. Materials costs shot up early last year, but then leveled off, resulting in lower-than-expected cost increases for the year.

Demand for plastic resins and for many industrial plastic and rubber products remains sluggish, and prices are weak industry officials and analysts expect sharply increased profits this year.

 Machine tools: Orders in the second half dropped 32 percent from a year earlier. Producers blame high interest rates, uncertainty about tax proposals to encourage investment and relatively low factory operating rates. Nonetheless, they are expected to be approved with little change by the 26th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party later this month. "Future growth is going to be more expensive." said one Western analyst who was asked to sum up the vision of the future that emthe vision of the future that emerges from the mass of figures.
There are upper limits in view on the labor supply and on other resources, at least in the short term.

The olan reflects that.

Growth in industrial production over the five-year period just ending was originally calculated at 36 percent, ft has fallen far short of percent, ft has fallen far short of that. For the next five years, the target is more modest: 26 10 28

assigned a planned growth-rate similar, in relative terms, to that assigned to heavy industry. "The investment figures simply do not suggest any massive reor-dering of priorities." a diplomat said. "I see no sign that enough in-vestment will be made in things like agriculture, housing and light manufacturing to hring a great deal of improvement in the average Soviet lifestyle." According to Western experts, the relatively modest investment allocations reflect not only a scar-city of resources — such as untilled land, spare manpower and raw materials — but also an unwillingness to penalize heavy industry, traditionally the favorite child of the Soviet economy, to boost consumer output. The key to the short-term economic outlook of the Soviet Union lies within the figures covering oil and grain. One will do much to determine overall growth the other to determine whether the country's critical shortages of meat and dairy products will end. In the new five-year guidelines, the Kremlin planners foresee oil production of 12.5 to 12.9 million barrels a day by 1985. That is almost precisely equal to the target for last year, which was set five years ago. It was not achieved; output was expected to have barely exceeded 12 million barrels a day.

Russian Plan Offers Little to Consumer Even if it were to be reache which most oil analysis doubt; annual total like the one set annual total like the one set is 1985 would represent an amount of the next five year only I percent, a patry figure to country that prided itself growth of 8 percent a year dun the boom days of the western berian fields in the 1960s a 1970s.

Crop Projection

A more exuberant project has been made for the grain en which is crucial because about of it goes toward feeding lives for milk and meal. About 200 lion toos a year were probaduring the last five years, on a age, but in the next five the So Unioo is shooting for 138 to million tous, an 18 percent million tous, an 18 percent crease.

But here, the question of the ture of the new plan and inde of its predecessors comes if focus. The Soviet Union has no once produced as much as 238, lion tons of grain in a term. lion tons of grain in a year, record was 237.5 million in 1! So how can it expect to aver more than that in 1981-85?

Although the planners talk bringing 17 million more acres cultivation and of improving a nology and efficiency, the trut that the projected target will be achieved without a minor in cle. For the plan presumes tha conditions will be optimal weather, labor supply, ferti supply, harvest — but that sh never takes place.

Some people think Bank of America only recently landed in Spain.

Actually, we arrived almost 20 years ago, just in time to help Iberia launch its first jet fleet.

It was 1962 when Bank of America opened a Representative Office in Madrid, and Iberia Airlines was one of our first customers. Later, we added two affiliate banks.

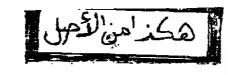

Now, one of those affiliate banks has become a wholly owned subsidiary called Bank of America S.A.E., and to-day you'll find us in Barcelona, Bilbao and Valencia, as well as Madrid.

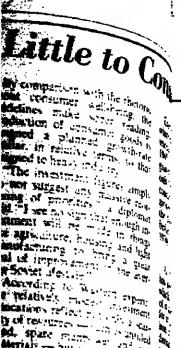

For peseta financing, letters of credit, foreign exchange, Eurocurrency financing — or just about any other financial service—Bank of America is right where you need us.

So whether you already do business in Spain—or simply want to get some local contacts and informationcall on Bank of America. We're definitely not just off the plane.

Bank of America S.A.E. has four full service branches in Spain: MADRID, Capitan Haya 1. Apartado 1168, Madrid 20, Spain; BARCELONA, Calle Bori y Fontestá 23, Apartado 2188, Barcelona 21, Spain; BILBAO, Plaza de Arriquibar 2 y 3, Bilbao 8, Spain; VALENCIA, Gran Vía Marqués del Turia 23, Apartado 658. Thank you for choosing fuel-efficient, Pratt & Whitney engines to power your new fleet of Airbus jetliners.

With its purchase of 11 aircraft, Saudi Arabian Airlines (Saudia) will be the first to fly the A300-600, the latest series in Airbus Industrie's growing product line.

After a lengthy evaluation, Saudia has decided to power all of these aircraft with Pratt & Whitney 7R4 engines, latest model of the JT9D.

One reason is fuel efficiency.

Another is proven technology. Serving 55 airlines, the JT9D is the world's most experienced wide-body engine, with over 36 million engine flight hours.

Still another is reliability. In fact, the JT9D has become the standard of comparison worldwide for evaluating the reliability of other wide-body engines.

In sum, the 7R4 is the engine of choice. For Saudia. For the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. For the world.

Cincinnati Firemen Ladder Truck

Goes Awry, Crashes ... as Usual

United Press International

The accident occurred after a truck of Ladder Co. 7 drove to a site near the Ohio River where a fire had been reported, but stopped when the blaze was not immediately visible.

The fireman who was steering the back end of the trailer section, got off the truck to try to find the fire. Not knowing that the man in the back had left the truck, the driver drove off. The trailer swayed behind, pulled Damage was minor and no injuries were reported, but three other similar accidents have occurred in recent months." After the most recent previous incident last month, the area safety director said that firemen could be faced with extra duty assignments as disciplinary action if another crash occurred.

The local fire chief characterized the accidents as the result of "pure

THE STRANGE DESTINY OF RUPERT BROOM

By John Lehmann. Holt, Rinehart & Winston Illustrated. 178 pp. $12.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

COME and die. It'll be great fun," Rupert Brooke wrote to a friend from the front during World War L And in the sonnets he wrote about the war, he made it sound like a sublime form of fun. He spoke of "swimmers into cleanness leaping" and young men finding at the front a sense of relief from "a world grown old and cold and weary."

The war was going badly for the British, and the people back home needed encouragement. In his Easter sermon for 1915, the dean of St. Paul's quoted one of Brooke's sonnets, and be became nationally famous overnight. When Brooke died in the Aegean shortly after that, Churchill turned out an orotund obituary in which he said of Brooke, "He advanced toward the brink in perfect sereni-

Canonized by Circumstance

And so, John Lehmann writes in "The Strange Destiny of Rupert Brooke," a flawed and uneven poet just at the beginning of his devel-opment was canonized by circumstance. As someone else observed, a poet's death was easier to grasp and sentimentalize over than poetry itself. Even the euphemistic Henry James wept over Brooke's death, saying that "he expressed us all, at the highest tide of our actu-

This was a time when thousands of Britain's young men were dying at the front and perhaps, like the Unknown Soldier, Brooke stood, in public consciousness, for them all. He was the last gasp of the notion of chivalry in war, before Wil-frid Owen, Siegfried Sassoon and Isaac Rosenberg began to write an-other kind of war poetry.

Almost a metaphor himself. Brooke seemed to have been born to illustrate an ideal England. The turn of the century was a time of boy worship, and he was, on the surface at least, the perfect English boy -- classically handsome, good at books and games, well born, witty, talented and so charming that he was loved almost on sight by men and women. Because he was loved too much when he was alive, posterity turned against Brooke. One critic after another began to find fault with the famous sonnets. Lehmann calls them "little more than a lulling incantation of cliches." Another writer said Brooke was "far too obsessed with his own sacrifice." Still another thought that the somets "do not deal with war; they reveal a sophisticated sensibility contemplating itself on the verge of war." Modern heroes don't wear well.

In "The Strange Destiny of Rupert Brooke," Lehmann skillfully tries to get at the truth between boles. Brooke, he says, was a promising if uneven poet, an accomplished versifier who might eventually have outgrown his "vague grandiloquence and high-sounding generalities." He had a talent for parody and light verse, was a good critic and an extraordinary travel writer who said, for ex-ample, about the Canadian land-scape, "It is indeed a new world" where "one misses the dead."

If Brooke was the ideal English youth, then it was a very curious ideal, for he was an emotional shambles, always falling in love and writing desperate letters to young women, although he showed little enthusiasm for sleeping with them. A misunderstanding about one of these young wom of his former friend, Lying chey, a dislike that spread clude Bloomsbury, intelle-feminism and Jews, Lebrum fully speculates that Brooks mg against Strackey with homosexual may have to frightened turning in the g his own soul

Though Brooke's behavior often ugly, he led what no called a beautiful life, a conce that seems impossibly anaditic today. He wrote poetry; garden of the Old Vicing Grantchester, read it at friends in a cance, went on ing and camping trips with well-bred girls and had a brilliant, attractive and call friends. The one concession Forest makes to this gamble is to leave a trio of bright: young first-teamers at home: The extremes of jet lag and Latin combat are best undergone only by experienced pros. Flying through time zones is, as Forest's rival Liverpool says, like putting paratin in an athlete's gas tank.

Nottingham's Foresters mean-while, went out into the Tokyo nightlife Monday, while Urugu-yans digested video recordings of their opponent's so-far indifferent scason. Even so, if the contest has any future, it is to be hoped that adv ing years have mellowed Julio Cesar Morales who, as a winger in 1971, savagely broke the leg of a Greek defender when Panathi-naikos fought for the cup after Ajax Amsterdam opted out. I suppose the root of the evil is the vast amount of cash as well as the intense patriotic hysteria of the crowds. The second cause is virtually eliminated: the money, however, is even more important.

Cash Considerations Nacional, with £50,000-per-month running costs, is on the brink of bankruptcy. A year ago, several directors were juiled until creditors were satisfied.

Nottingham meanwhile is to a spiral that demands lucrative returns to competition: £1,000 per week interest charges on a new £2.5-million stand, star wages and £2,000,000 paid this season alone in transfer fees. While the Japanese sit, perhaps bemused by a tense, tactical battle, one wonders if their eyes can take in the magnitude of the occasion. The immediate consequence is that the winner will seek extortionate sums to play prestige matches. Longer-term, the future of Europe-an-South American sporting exhange is at stake.

One small revelation to the Thomases is bound to have been that on the face of things, there is little difference between homegrown Tottenham Hotspurs and little Osvaldo Ardiles, the Argentine who runs the team's midfield. The worlds, in other words, can be brought peaceably together.

In Holland's opinion, when the Celtics made their offer last

As for partial compensation it-self, it's exactly where it was last May — nowhere. The owners still demand that the team that loses a "premium free agent" should be partially compensated with the 16th-best player of the club that loth-best player of the club that gobbles up its player. The owners' standard for a "premium" player is still vague — one in the top 50 percent of all players in at-bass or innings played and being drafted by eight teams.

"We can't even get them to make a substantive definition of what they mean by 'premium,' "says Miller.

Spring training is still a month away, but the tenor of the sport's spring has already been set. After a nine-mouth smokescreen of public relations to convince fans that voices of reason were negotiating in back rooms, the old game has shown its all-too-familiar face with age-old animosioes and swollen egos butting in. The last thing baseball needs is a replay of the boring labor ogliness of a year ago. But that's what it's stuck with.

Nadig clocked a combined time of 2 mioutes 31.40 seconds for the two legs, while Marin Epple posted a 2:32.01 and Irene a 2:32.16.

The victory boosted Nadig's point total in the World Cup standings to 273. Compatriot Erika Hess has 201 and defending champioo Hanni Wenzel of Liechtenstein has 188.

The slope, straight and only moderately difficult, was an icy strip on a low-lying mountain almost bared of snow by recent springlike temperatures. There were 46 gates io the first run and 47 in the second.

Organizers had considered postponing the race — already can-celed twice since it was added to the cup circuit in 1973. But 500 soldiers worked during the night to pack the slope with enough snow to allow the event to be run as scheduled.

"The race was difficult," Nadig said, whose only problems seemed to come on the slope's steep final stretch. "It was extremely icy, and thought it would be canceled. Only experienced racers had any Forgive me, Comrade Chairman," said Gromyko. "Access to the private entrance was not a pro-vocation. It was extended as a special courtesy of detente. By making Dohrynin now use the front door like the British and the Italians, the State Department appears to be signaling the end of detente and resumption of the cold war."

"Personally," said Brezhnev, "I always like to go in the front door myself, hut . . . you mean they said. 'We don't want you coming through our garage anymore. Do hrynin.'?"

"That's about the size of it." said Gromyko. "We will have to retaliate of course."

"How does the American ambassador now get into the Soviet Foreign Office?" asked Brezhnev. Through the front door?"

Gromyko nodded. "Then why not tell him from now on he has to come in through the garage and use the freight elevator?"

"It's too subtle for the Ameri-cans to appreciate," said Gromyko. "Let's never forget we are dealing with a people hardened hy prime-time television.

Brezhnev saw that Gromyko, the old master of diplomacy, as usual had his own proposal.

"Since you ask, Comrade, I do." said Gromyko. "Suppose I throw a large dinner, invite the American amhassador, hut give orders that he be passed over when the dessert is served?"

"That means," said Brezhnev, "that Alexander Haig will have to invite Dobrynin to dinner and pour the soup in his lap." "Then," said Gromyko, "I will

been watching whales for years, for the last five as operator of tour boats in Half Moon Bay. where once the hig grays were hunted with harpoons loaded with explosives rather than with the cameras clicking vigorously today. He reports the grays more plentiful each year.

It was not always so. Once one of the most hunted of creatures, the gray has twice been near extinction, once in the late 1800s after Charles Scammon, one of the men who has contributed most to literature of the gray whale, discovered its winter mating and calving coves in Baja California, Mexico. A whaler, Scammon kept the hreeding grounds secret for two years, filiing his holds, but other whaling captains watched and followed him, slaughtering the gray in droves for the oil and for bone for corset stays. Almost wiped out by the 1880s, supplanted by more plentiful species and the discovery of petroleum, the gray recovered, only to be slaughtered again in the 1930s and after World War II. when international whaling was renewed, with devastating effect on the whale population.

By 1949, when the new International Whaling Commission all but hanned the taking of grays, their number had been reduced to no more than 4,400.

Today estimates put the num-ber at 12,000 to 17,000 in two overlapping herds. The larger herd migrates from Alaska's Ber-ing Strait 6,000 miles to Baja California to mate and caive, and the other goes from the same Alaskan area to Korea.

Official Recognition

There is speculation that the alternative migration across the northern Pacific developed as a result of the carnage in Baja California in the 1800s, that the whales developed a race memory.

Today, protected, and even honored as California's official marine mammal, the grays seem secure. They arrive here playful, performing leaps and "skyhops." They have surged out of the cold Bering Sea, through the Aleutians, along the shores of Canada, Washington and Oregon, into California waters. They swim powerfully day and and night, eating nothing on their monthslong journey, churning past the Monterey, past the promontories they are simply curious.

Before they leave the Bering Sea, the animals, 45 feet long. weighing a ton a foot, gorge on tiny sea creatures, chiefly krill, a small shrimp-like crustacean that the whale harvests by straining seawater through a mesh, like a hairy fine-tooth comb, called baleen, extending from the upper

After feeding for four months. the whales eat little or nothing for eight months, three on the trip to Baja California, two in the lagoon, three on return. On the way hack some of the females have 14-foot offspring that, like other mammals, feed on mother's milk, a thousand gallons month. Born skinny after 13 months of gestation, bahy whales lack the hlubber to hold them afloat, and must be nudged to the surface lest they drown.

Mating among creatures so huge poses problems; it is done in threes, two males to each female, one male acting as a couch.

While swimming, a whale may perform a "skyhop." It will stop, lower its tail into the water and hoist its head above, holding it there for a few seconds, one small eye cocked at shore, or, if it is being watched from a boat, watching back. As is true of other gray whale behavior, ma-rine biologists are unsure of the sea otters in the kelp beds at motivation. One theory is that
